Anthropology and archaeology courses now offered

Hannah Horton
Editor-in-Chief

Two new courses, Cultural Anthropology and Introduction to Archaeology, are available to TJC students starting this fall.

These courses are taught by Dr. Keith Eppich, who has 24 years of teaching experience and has recently worked at Collin College and Southern Methodist University.

Cultural Anthropology focuses on defining and studying human culture. "It's a very simple thing to define and a very simple thing to talk about, but a very difficult thing to study," said Eppich. "We talk about a variety of different human cultures, from Native Americans in Amazonia, to African pastoralists in South Central Africa. Different societies do things in different ways, and things that we take for granted as being done a certain way are done very, very differently in other societies. Some of them do it well, and some of them do it poorly."

Eppich defined archeology as "looking at how to think critically of the human past."

Students who choose to take

Eppich's Introduction to Anthropology class can look forward to multiple hands-on activities. "We make chocolate, we shoot watermelons, we handle ancient American pottery," listed Eppich. "We look at historical problems: Who built the pyramids? What happened in the last days of Pompeii?"

According to History/Geography Department Chair

Dr. Jeffrey Owens, these new courses will be highly beneficial to students who are looking to transfer. "One of the big reasons that anthropology was attractive is that it's readily transferrable," said Owens.

"I needed electives on the history majors' degree plan that would easily transfer, so that students who got an AA in history would not have to repeat coursework at their receiving institution. We didn't have very many courses in our department that history majors could take to fill out a degree plan."

Enrollment in these new courses is not limited to history majors. "It can be an elective for anybody," explained Owens.

Cultural Anthropology and Introduction to Archaeology will both be offered again in the spring. Registration for the spring 2019 semester opens on November 11.

Apache enrollment breaks record

Sharae Corbin
News Editor

This fall, TJC's population hit a record high with 12,270 students enrolled. Last fall, there were only 11,881 students enrolled, meaning TJC has seen a 7 percent increase in just one year.

"We've hit an all-time historic high with enrollment," Marketing, Media and Communications Executive Director Kim Lessner said. This summer, TJC has implemented new strategies that have contributed to the rise in admissions. "Between admissions, the registrar's office, and our Advising Department, we had a lot of registration events [which] are especially important for first-time college students. We call them 'fast-track' events because in one day you can get tested, see an advisor, register for classes and walk out with a printed schedule. This was very well received."

In addition to expanding the number of "fast track" events, the time of the events was also expanded to fit schedules of students who work longer hours by offering a "late evening and Saturdays," Lessner said.

Besides events, Director of Public Affairs and Media Relations Rebecca Sanders said that "communication, [such as] text messages and emails, [were sent to] students that were really close to completing their paperwork." These reminders encouraged students to "be ready," Sanders said.

Lastly, TJC "has increased the number of class offerings [by] adding the new industrial matinece [and] culinary arts program," Sanders said. "TJC will continue to grow, and [with] the ability to offer up to five bachelors degrees, you will probably see us go in that direction very quickly," said Lessner. "TJC is all about meeting the needs of the local employers ... We offer a great quality education, but at a very affordable price. You will continue to see TJC grow, make no doubt about it."

Housing rules are too strict

Bella Mendiola
Student Life Editor

It's Monday night, and all of your new college friends have decided to go back to Crossroads to have a group study session. All but one. She lives in Vaughn, and although she can visit in the crowded, noisy, and disruptive first-floor lobby, she's not even allowed to step foot on the elevator. It's been the talk of all the freshmen, and even some sophomores: are the Tyler Junior College residence rules unfair?

For those unaware of the origin of these rules, last year, Campus Police received reports of four sexual assaults occurring in the newest dorms on campus, Crossroads. Although there are many speculations, there are no formal articles detailing the report. After this incident, TJC administration responded by almost completely cutting off visitation hours, an act many students deemed unnecessary. The act of taking away visitation hours seemed to hold the students responsible for the actions of the unknown attackers, rather than the campus as a whole. How else could the campus have responded in a dire act to keep their students living in the residence halls safe?

The Crossroads dormitories feature suite-style bathrooms, as many dorms on campus do. However, the bathroom doors in Crossroads do not feature locks on either side. This means that suitmates and whoever they may have over can come into either room at any time. This can present multiple problems including assault, robbery and disturbance. Although this is a problem, it has a simple solution: installing locks.

Although cutting off non-student visitors was a sufficient act, no articles depicted the attackers as current TJC students. Therefore, cutting off and limiting visitation between ongoing TJC students seems like a reach. This act not only prevents students from making social bonds, it can create much more damage than the previous rules.

As many students who attend TJC are either teenagers or young adults experiencing "total freedom" for the first time, a simple rule will not stop them from having their classmates over. This means that many students are sneaking friends in, whether they are TJC students or not. This also means they are not checking them in at the front desk, and the Residence Advisors on duty do not know who is in the buildings. If something horrible were to happen again, the school will not have an accurate log of who was actually in the building at the reported time. A solution to this ongoing problem could be less strict visitation rules, which allow students to be honest about who they are bringing into their dorm rooms.

With all this in consideration, it's important to take a closer look at other college visitation regulations. UT Dallas was ranked one of the top ten safest college campuses in Texas by Niche. Their housing rules state: "Lounges are open to visitors of hall residents 24 hours a day. Overnight guests are allowed only with the approval of all your roommates, and only one overnight guest per suite/apartment will be allowed at any given time. Visitors must be escorted by a resident. Residents are responsible for the consequences of their guests' actions." This defeats the idea that stricter visitation hours lead to safer campuses.

Although to many the TJC housing rules seem unfair, there are two bigger questions that campus administration needs to consider: What are some other ways to protect the campus without holding current student residents responsible for the horrible acts committed last year? And, are the current housing rules doing more harm than good?

"The act of taking away visitation hours seemed to hold the students responsible for the actions of the unknown attackers, rather than the campus as a whole."

Meet the Editors: Anna Graves, Digital Content Manager

Hi! My name is Anna Graves. I'm The DrumBeat's Digital Content Manager. That's basically a fancier title than saying online editor. I manage the social media for The DrumBeat, publish stories on our website, and keep it up to date, as well as keep up a YouTube presence. I'll sometimes write stories for the newspaper too, like the one you're reading now. It's usually about more important stuff, though.

This is my third semester being a part of TJC student media, and my second semester as online editor. I love the work here. It's given lots of great learning opportunities!

I am majoring in broadcast journalism and mass communications. Recently I got a job at CBS19 as video editor.

I was born and raised here in Tyler, Texas. My favorite things include country music, filmmaking, anything within my major of course, and theatrical sword fighting.

Yeah, you heard that right -- sword fighting. I'll admit, I'm a nerd. Stage combat and acting is something I've done for at least eight years now. More stage fighting than actual acting, but that's beside the point.

My hope for this semester is that I grow even more in my journalism skills, and learn a lot through my experiences. And get good grades in all my classes too.

I hope that whoever is reading this has a great semester as well!

Alumnus Jimmy Butler Honored

Nick Kennebrew
Sports Writer

On Saturday, Sept. 8, former Apache Alumnus Jimmy Butler was inducted into the TJC Sports Circle Of Honor, where he received a signature gold coat.

Despite spending just one year in the school, Butler is widely regarded as one of Tyler Junior College's most prominent basketball products of all time.

He led the Apaches in scoring, with an average of 19 points per game. He went on to play for Marquette University and in 2011, he was picked 30th overall in the NBA draft by the Chicago Bulls. He is a four-time NBA All-Star and was named NBA Most Improved Player in 2015. The 2016 Olympic gold medalist was traded to the Minnesota Timberwolves in 2017 and averaged 22 points during his first season.

TJC had an alumni game which featured Tyler Jefferson, Craig Jones, Justin Johnson, Ifeanyi Koggu, Mitch Marquis, Reggie Nelson, Kevis Shipman, Delbert Simpson, Cedric Smith, Theo White and Marcus Jackson.

The Black team defeated the Gold Team, 67-65, behind White's 25 point performance. While Nelson, a former John Tyler standout, led the Gold team with 20 points.

The "Jimmy Butler TJC Promise Shootout" followed at halftime.

It was presented by Citizens 1st Bank. Student representatives from public high schools that are currently participating in the TJC Promise Program competed. Butler helped provide money to local school districts.

The students took free throw and 3-point shots for a chance to win monetary prizes that would be dedicated to community scholarship funds. The endowments will provide TJC scholarships in perpetuity to the deserving students that have participated in the program.

Tyler Lee's Devin

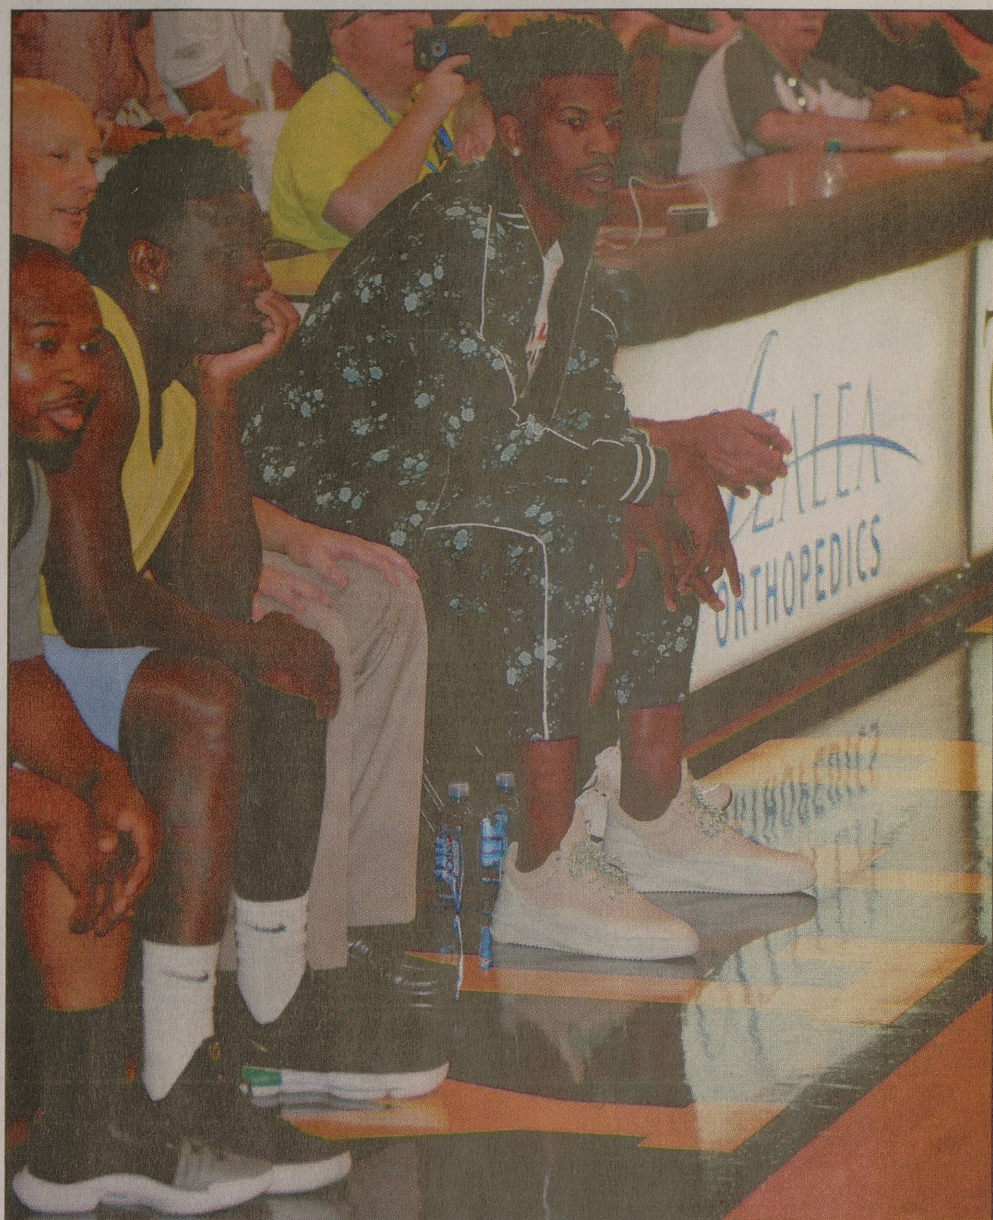

Johnson made four free throws and four 3-pointers to record the highest total of the event. Johnson along with John Tyler's Darry Moore earned $22,000 for Tyler ISD.

The other participants were Chapel

Hill's Chason Wright, Grand Salines Luke Fraim, Lindale's Teigan Edwards, Van's Austin Mithcell and Winona's Dakota Pullum.

TJC named the Wagstaff Gymnasium's Lobby after Butler, retired his jersey and Tyler city councilman John Nix named Sept. 8, 2018, as "Jimmy Butler Day" and presented Butler with a key to the city.

"The love I have for this city, school, coaches, all the players I have played with and all the new guys — this is where it all began for me. I'm grateful and thankful for everything, this is much more than I could ever imagined," Butler said.

Up and down season - New attitude for TJC Volleyball

TJC Ladies Volleyball Team sets up a shot.

COURTESY PHOTO

Nick Kenebrew
Sports Editor

TJC Volleyball has a great deal of hope for this season. The team started the preseason ranked No. 6, but Head Coach Brandi Hood lets the team do the talking on the court. Returning players have also bought into the new attitude.

"Preseason rankings for us don't really mean a whole lot. It's based on how you finished the year before and the team is a whole new team," Hood said.

However, Hood believes that ranking matters more so at the end of the season for playoffs. "If you've done the work, you're going to be deserving of that spot," Hood said.

The team is very technique and skilled based. Recruiting goes well with Hood getting International and American players.

Of course you want your hitters to be tall, but Hood is willing to coach any player. "They have to be able to have the technique already, or we can see that they're very coachable and be able to pick up on things," Hood said.

Volleyball like most team sports, requires a positive team relationship and good communication skills. This is what Hood is trying to convey.

Last year was an up and down season for the program, but the dynamic is so much better this year. "Our team energy, the way we play together, communication and the excitement we bring to the game, that has been our biggest change right away," Hood said.

The team is setting at (6-1), but the season is still young. If the program keeps their composure and have that winning mentality, they have nothing to worry about.

Second annual Gold Rush Tailgate is postponed

Maya Gayler
Managing Editor

The Apache Chiefs were all geared up and ready to host their tailgate, when a storm rolled in. They had high hopes for sunshine, but Texas had other plans. The Chiefs had just made it to Rose Stadium when the down pour began. They tried waiting it out but it looked like it might rain for a while. As soon as the tailgate was called off, the rain let up for the rest of the night. Lauren Tyler and Murphy Turner discussed going back to the stadium, but ended on re-scheduling for the homecoming game. It is an appealing idea because the alumni tailgate is not happening this year, and students have asked if there is a tailgate for the game. The homecoming game has a large turnout from students and community already, so it is the perfect opportunity for a great Gold Rush.

TJC is well known for its rich culture of traditions. Last fall, the Apache Chiefs introduced a new tradition to the campus. Many colleges carry the tradition of students running onto the field before one of their home football games, and TJC has joined that list. The Gold Rush is a gathering where students are encouraged to wear their Apache gold and run onto the field before kickoff.

"We wanted it to be more like a true tailgate that you would see at a university, with different booths set up," said Student Life Director Lauren Tyler. The tailgate is a good opportunity for students to build community.

"It's also an opportunity for the Apache Chiefs to reconnect with their orientation students and new students they've met on campus, in an effort to help them find a home here at TJC," said Murphy Turner, Apache Chief Sponsor.

This event allows students to experience several organizations in action. The organizations are encouraged to come out and set up a table either for their group or for the community, which allows them to recruit new members.

Rushing the field is not the only thing on the agenda for this event. Free hamburgers, hot dogs, and cold drinks are served, along with games to play. This event was created to strengthen the attendance at TJC athletic events because of the noticeably low support.

"The food was great. It was a lot of fun getting to connect with the Chiefs, and I got to meet new people," said student Emilee Rogers about her experience as a freshman at the first ever TJC Gold Rush event. The students that take part in the gold rush together will forever share a once-in-a-lifetime experience.

"It's an opportunity to get involved in the game and to come out and support the athletes. Who doesn't love to be the superstar, to get out on the field?" said Tyler.

The Gold Rush is a new tradition TJC hopes to keep for generations to come.

This year's Homecoming theme is "Share Your Story."

In order to make this week even more special, TJC is asking all current students and alumni to "share your favorite TJC memories." The school is eager to know if you discovered love, met your lifelong best friend, or found inspiration while here at TJC.

You can submit any of your stories online at TJC.edu/homecoming, or on social media

Taylor Tallant Staff Writer

TJC will be celebrating their 92nd Homecoming with a week of activities.

The goal is to not only to "share your story," but to make memories all week as well.

Homecoming activities will launch on Monday, Sept. 26, 2018 with the annual drum beat.

"The drum beat starts on Monday and goes to Saturday and doesn't stop until the game ... because if it does stop, then the rumor is that we will lose the game," said Lauren Tyler, Director of Student Life.

You can sign up with any TJC club or organization to participate in the drum beat.

The Office and Sidewalk Chalk Decorating Contest begins Monday, as well. Each organization has the choice of decorating an office, residence hall lobby, or the designated sidewalk near Jenkins Hall.

Judging will take place on Tuesday, Sept. 25, and the first place winner of each contest will receive 100 points towards the Warrior Spirit Award.

Monday will also kick off our Homecoming King and Queen elections which will continue until Wednesday. You can vote at either Rogers Student Center or Jenkins Hall from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m..

Wednesday, Sept. 26, TJC will be hosting a homecoming dance in the Rogers Student Center Apache Rooms at 8 p.m. This dance has no cost, no dress code, and according to Lauren Tyler special guest, "DJ CP [from] Incredible Sounds" will also be attending. Get ready to dance, have fun, and, if you are one of the first 500 lucky students, enjoy a free late-night breakfast in the Apache Junction at 11 p.m.

The Apache Nation Parade will take place on Thursday, Sept. 27, at 5:15 p.m. It is expected to start at the Rogers Nursing and Health Sciences Center and finish in front of Jenkins with a pep rally performance by our Apache Band, Cheer Squad, and renowned Belles, along with the announcement of our Warrior Spirit Winners.

Following the Pep Rally will be the annual Block Party hosted on Jenkins Lawn.

Come celebrate our Apache school spirit with food, games, and plenty of fun activities.

The traditional Campus Capers Talent Show will be hosted on Friday, Sept. 28, at 7 p.m. in Wise Auditorium. The first place winner will receive a grand prize of $300. Here they will also announce the top five nominees for Homecoming court, as well as "Most Beautiful" and "Most Handsome."

Finally, Homecoming week comes to an end on Saturday, Sept. 29 as we take on New Mexico Military Institute at the newly renovated Rose Stadium at 7 p.m.

Q&A with: Tamara Haynes, Professor of Visual Communications

Tamara Haynes teaches her students about meters and histograms.

Cecilia Kohl Staff Writer

Q: Are you named after anyone, or are you an original?

A: "I am not named after anyone. My mother did see the name Tamara in a Russian newspaper and liked it. I think she may have mispronounced it. Most people say "Tam-ra" when they see the way I spell mine, but my mother didn't hear it, she read it. So I have been "Ta-mare-auh" ever since.

Q: How long have you been teaching at TJC?

A: "Forever. I taught my first class in the late '70s part-time. It was a basic photography class night course. I was in my 20s, and now I am not! It has been about some 40 odd years that I have taught here."

Q: Did you go to TJC?

A: "I did go to TJC. The courses are not the same, but I did take Photography. The courses have changed somewhat because we are in the computer age. Photography has changed, as far as the process, but not the way cameras work. An example being the F/stop and shutter speeds. I went on to UT and got my bachelor's degree in teaching."

Q: What made you choose to teach at TJC?

A: "I started off in the program itself, and I was just so enamored with it! I became a lab assistant in my second semester while attending TJC. That gave me the opportunity to show and train others, and I knew what I had to do. I wanted to teach and come back here to TJC."

Q: What is your favorite thing about taking photos?

A: "The creativity of it. You can take a snapshot, but if you take the time to really look at your subject, and look at the way the light is falling on your subject, and get the proper camera angle and composition, it can be a work of art that is one of a kind. That is what I enjoy about taking photos."

Q: What is the coolest thing you are working on right now?

A: "What I like to do is to get to know the new fall students and supply them with new information. Also, helping them whenever I can, in whatever they might need help in, with any issues. That is the coolest thing I am doing right now."

Q: What makes for a successful semester?

A: "Come to class!"

Student serves in Dominican Republic

Hannah Horton
Editor-in-Chief

After spending a month in the Dominican Republic over the summer, TJC sophomore Hannah Sanders plans to return and continue serving others during the fall semester.

Sanders' boyfriend, Ernesto Lluveres, is a 2018 TJC graduate who hails from Santo Domingo, the capital of the Dominican Republic.

Sanders got to know Lluveres in 2017, while he was still attending TJC. "We were in all of the same organizations, and we always saw each other," explained Sanders.

"So, we started talking, and then we started dating in December."

Sanders met Lluveres' parents when they traveled from the Dominican Republic to Tyler in May for his graduation. It was then that they suggested she should visit them in Santo Domingo. Lluveres' family hosts service groups from all over the world through their company, Imagine Santo Domingo. "They've hosted an array of different people," said Sanders. "Just people who want to come and help."

In July, Sanders flew to the Dominican Republic to spend a month with the Lluveres family. "It wasn't just a resort vacation," she explained. "It was actually getting to experience the culture, and the community."

According to Sanders, it took a while to adjust to the differences between life in the US and the Dominican Republic. "Everything about it was different," she said. "In [the Lluveres'] house, there's no A/C ... there were three days where we didn't have water because we didn't have electricity to run the pumps to get the water. Despite all that, they were always so happy, and so appreciative of everything that they had."

Sanders was happy to participate in service work during her time in the Santo Domingo. "Every day, we would go and feed the kids lunch," she said. Sanders and the Lluvereses also spent time picking up trash from the beach and renovating apartments that were owned by the Lluveres family.

Additionally, Sanders had the opportunity to help a group of high schoolers from New York, who were hosted by Imagine Santo Domingo, and members of the Santo Domingo community to rebuild a park. "It was super overgrown," said Sanders. "There was the skeleton of a swing set and a place where there probably was a seesaw, or a slide, or something. And then there were tires, and that was it ... The grass was up to our knees. It was in really rough shape."

The park's transformation was incredible. "It was completely mowed. There was paint on all of the swing sets. There were swings on all of the swing sets, and they were installing seesaws. And it wasn't just the group that was doing it. There were probably 40 people from the community." The renovated park was well-received by local children. "Immediately after it was done, the kids were on it and playing!" exclaimed Sanders. Members of the community also installed solar-powered lights so that the children could play in the park after dark. "We went to the city after the group left, and when we came back home, it was 9:30, maybe 10 o'clock at night. It was pitch-black outside," Sanders said. "All these kids [were] still playing at the park, because the lights [were] up, and they were having the time of their lives!"

This semester, Sanders is taking online classes and is planning to return to the Dominican Republic by the end of September. "I'm not entirely sure how long I'm going to stay," she explained. "I would like to stay for the semester, but also, I will be graduating, so I'd like to be back in time to do the graduation process ... I'll probably go down there and stay for about a month again."

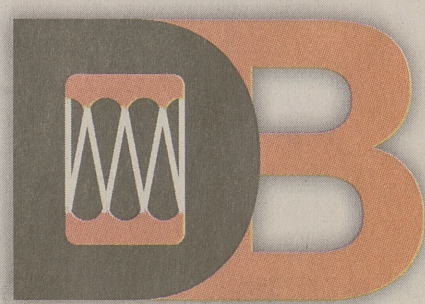

"Every single person down there seemed to have a genuine happiness," said Sanders. "I think that that comes from not taking for granted the things that they have."

You can learn more about Imagine Santo Domingo at their Facebook page or at their website, imaginesantodomingo.wixsite.com/imagine.
